

Paper Guidelines

Format:

In general, the paper should be a research paper, though some topics allow more creative styles. You should find a number of references, read them, and assimilate the information. Then you must write the paper in your own words. A research paper is not a book report on a single book, nor is it a strictly argumentative paper presenting your own ideas. If you want to do something unconventional, talk to us about your idea first.

The paper must be typed double-spaced about 5 pages long. We'll allow papers with 4 or 6 pages, but try to make every word meaningful. The paper must have a title and the pages must be numbered.

Research:

Acceptable sources include scholarly books, journals, and conference proceedings. More popular books written by scientists, magazines such as Scientific American, Nature, and Science, and textbooks for other classes are almost always acceptable as well. Newspapers, newsmagazines like Time or Newsweek, and books by people without credentials are less satisfactory and should usually be used to guide you to more reliable sources. You may reference the textbook for this class, but not as a major source. Information from the internet should be carefully evaluated: technical information on a space mission from a NASA site on the World Wide Web is certainly acceptable; but an anonymous opinion from a non-expert or a blog is certainly not.

References:

Any idea or fact that you have obtained from a source must be properly referenced to avoid plagiarism (see below). There are several acceptable ways to do this. One convenient method is to give the name of the author and the page number in parentheses, following the idea or fact. For example, you could write, "Venus is similar to Earth in many ways... (Evans, 87)," and include the full reference with author, title, publications, year of publication, etc. in the bibliography at the end.

Plagiarism and Collusion:

I take these issues seriously. Failure to follow the University rules on these matters will result in an F on the paper and may result in a referral to the Dean's office. I follow the guidelines adopted by the Division of Rhetoric and Composition, which I reproduce (with permission) below.

STATEMENT ON SCHOLASTIC RESPONSIBILITY

The writing you do in the Division of Rhetoric and Composition (DRC) courses must be your own. Passing off the work of others as your own can be either plagiarism or collusion. Both are scholastic offenses that the DRC will not tolerate. The definitions and descriptions below will help you know what acts constitute either violation.

Plagiarism

The General Information Catalog of the University of Texas at Austin defines plagiarism as follows:

the appropriation, buying, receiving as a gift, or obtaining by any means another's work and the unacknowledged submission or incorporation of it in one's own written work offered for credit (p. 173).

1. You commit plagiarism if you fail to acknowledge the sources of any information in your paper which is not either common knowledge or personal knowledge. Common knowledge includes facts, dates, events, information, and concepts that belong generally to the educated public. Even if you used a reference book to discover the dates of George Washington's presidency, for example, you would not have to acknowledge the source because those dates fall into the range of historical common knowledge. If you borrowed material that interpreted or commented on Washington's presidency, however, you would be expected to cite your source. You can acknowledge a source through in-text citations, attribution lines (for example, "Gloria Steinem observes in 'Erotica and Pornography'..."), footnotes, or other forms of documentation approved by your instructor.
2. You commit plagiarism if you fail to acknowledge direct quotation either by using quotation marks when quoting short passages or indentation when quoting longer passages. Without the quotation marks or indentation, a passage copied directly from a source might be considered plagiarized even if it were followed by an in-text citation or a footnote: the citation or footnote acknowledges that you have a source but it does not indicate that you have borrowed someone else's exact words. If you use the language of a source, word-for-word, you must use quotation marks or block indentation.
3. You commit plagiarism if you merely paraphrase the original words of your source. Some students think that they can avoid a charge of plagiarism by changing a few words in each sentence they copy, or by rearranging the shape of phrases or the order of sentences in a paragraph. This is not true. When you take notes, you must be careful to put ideas in your own words, or to use direct quotation when you are relying on phrases borrowed directly from a source.
4. You commit plagiarism if you borrow the ideas, examples, or structure of your source without acknowledging it. You can be guilty of plagiarism if you systematically borrow the ideas and organization of a source—even if the language of your piece is substantially original. A student who, for example, reports on a major news event by using exactly the same ideas in the same order as they appear in an article in Time or Newsweek might be accused of plagiarism.
5. You commit plagiarism if you take, buy or receive a paper written by someone else and present it as your own.
6. You commit plagiarism if you use one paper for two different courses, or re-use a paper previously submitted for credit, without the prior approval of the instructor or instructors.

If you want to use words, ideas, or the structure of a selection such as the passage below from Harper's, you may do so correctly in two ways.

Medical costs will bankrupt this country if they continue on their current trajectory. And there are no data to demonstrate that improved management techniques will solve the problem. "Managed care" and "managed competition" might save money in the short run (though the examples of some other managed industries—such as the utilities and airlines do not inspire confidence). But the bulk of the savings achieved by Health Maintenance Organizations has been achieved by cutting back on expensive, unprofitable facilities such as burn centers, neonatal-intensive-care units, emergency rooms and the like. In other words, HMOs conduct what amounts to a hidden form of health-care rationing confident that municipal and university hospitals are still around to pick up the slack (Gaylin 62).

Gaylin, Willard M.D. "Faulty Diagnosis: Why Clinton's Health-Care Plan Won't Cure What Ails Us." Harper's (Oct. 1993): 57-64.

1) You may quote from the passage directly, using appropriate citations and quotation marks or (when the quotation is lengthy) indentation. For example:

Willard Gaylin, a professor of psychiatry at Columbia Medical School, maintains that "medical costs will bankrupt this country if they continue on their current trajectory. And there are no data to demonstrate that improved management techniques will solve the problem" (62).

2) You may report the information in your own words, acknowledging Gaylin as your source and using an in-text citation to indicate the location of the passage:

Doctor Gaylin, for instance, does not believe that the improved management techniques proposed by the Clinton administration will solve the problem of rising medical costs, because the cost-cutting measures followed by HMOs under the current system will not be feasible when all Americans belong to such health collectives (62).

You may not simply change a few words or phrases and call the material your own, even if you acknowledge a source. The following passage based on Gaylin's original would be considered plagiarism—with or without an in-text citation or footnote:

Medical expenses will ruin America if we stay on our current path. There is no evidence that better management techniques will fix the trouble. "Managed care" may save some money today, but the way things are we will still pay for expensive, unprofitable care tomorrow.

You may not call the work your own if you change the language in the original passage but closely follow its organization, ideas and examples. Most instructors would consider the following passage too much like Gaylin's original to be considered acceptable as a student's work:

Our country will go broke if it follows on its current path. And there is no information that says we can get out of this mess through better management. HMOs are successful today because they leave the county and teaching hospitals to fund costly, unprofitable specialized care (Gaylin 62).

Collusion

The General information Catalog of the University of Texas at Austin defines collusion as follows:

the unauthorized collaboration with another person in preparing written work offered or credit, or collaboration with another person to commit a work offered for credit, or collaboration with another person to commit a violation of any section of the rules on scholastic responsibility (p. 173).

1) You commit collusion if you allow someone else to write your papers. 2) You also commit collusion if you allow someone else to edit your papers. It is scholastically dishonest for students to employ tutors to correct, edit, or modify essays in any substantive fashion. The same reservations and restrictions apply, within reason, to any outside assistance you may receive from a parent, friend, roommate, or academic tutor. Any changes, deletions, rearrangements, additions or corrections made in your essays should represent your own work. If you want assistance in a course beyond that which your instructor can offer in class or in conference, you can use the DRC's Undergraduate Writing Center (UWC) in the UGL or the Learning Skills Center (LSC) in Jester A332. Tutors at these facilities are trained to comment on essays and to offer advice without editing or rewriting papers.

Permissible Tutoring

Corrections made in your essays should be your own work. In other words, your readers can tell you the kinds of errors you make, but cannot correct them for you. On the next page is an example of the tutoring you may receive.

The time has come for the University of Texas to adopt domestic partner legislation. Having argued about this issue in Austin, many colleges, such as Swarthmore, Stanford, and the University of Wisconsin offer life and health insurance to the romantic partners of there employees. The partners in domestic partnerships are gay, lesbian, or heterosexual; they have to live with someone employed by the colleges offering benefits. They also have to register with the colleges' personnel offices if they want benefits. The city of Austin already gives its employees these benefits, its time for the university to do the same.

Your paragraph has several grammatical errors. Also, some ideas repeat themselves.

Penalties

If you have any question or doubts for a given essay about the way you are employing sources or getting assistance in writing a paper, consult your instructor before handing it in. The penalties for plagiarism or collusion can be severe. In all demonstrable cases of either offense, the DRC recommends that its instructors fail the student for the entire course, not just for the paper. However the penalty in a given case is at the discretion of the individual instructor. Your instructor must discuss any charge of scholastic dishonesty directly with you, and may also refer you to the Director or Associate Director of the DRC. In most instances, a plagiarism or collusion case is resolved either between student and instructor, or between instructor, student, and Director or Associate Director. If it is not, a student does have a right to a hearing before a designated university official and a right to make an appeal to the Office of the Dean of Students.
